Spring is finally here, and with it comes a sense of renewal and a desire to try new things. As the weather warms up and nature blooms around us, why not take this opportunity to refresh your social dancing skills or try out new dance styles? Whether you're into salsa, swing, tango, or any other style, you'll be sure to find a class or event listed in the April issue that suits your preferences.

There's no better way to enjoy the season of renewal than by learning some new moves and meeting awesome people, whether you're flying solo or partnered up, So, grab your dance shoes, let loose, and make this spring a season to remember! Not only will you have a blast, but you'll also be doing your body and mind a favor. Dance your way into happiness and health – it's the perfect way to celebrate spring!

A Duchenne Smile Makes You More Approachable

By Richard Fiore

(Licentiate, (LAB, LAR, T) Imperial Society of Teachers of Dancing)

Email Richard at: rf1111@yahoo.com

The dance floor is an excellent place to wear a bright smile especially since dancing is an activity that already promotes a heightened state of joyfulness. Smiling is the universal expression of joy. It helps people to feel less stressed and thereby promotes an overall feeling of well-being. This is an excellent habit to cultivate on the dance floor as it expresses one's pure passion for dancing.

Smiling is a valuable personal attribute that creates the potential for positive social interactions. It makes one appear more self-confident and accepting of others. It has many other benefits to our physical and emotional well-being. Studies have found that people who smile are perceived to be more approachable. Moreover, it has the effect of eliciting a smile in another person. This is always a good way to break down shyness barriers that may exist at a social dance setting.

Have you ever seen dancers that are not smiling? You may occasionally notice someone with a blank stare or even a frown. It is good to avoid these facial expressions on the dance floor as it may convey disinterest, insecurity or even irritation to name a few. A blank stare or a worried look does not support the joy of dancing. Smiling creates an internal chemistry that creates a more positive mood. It enhances one's entire personal experience in a profound way. However, it is always a good idea to make it a genuine smile and one that you can effortlessly sustain throughout the dance. A smile should be natural and not forced. A forced smile is unnatural and may have quite the opposite effect on what a smile is supposed to convey. In some cases, a forced smile may appear as though one is not genuinely enjoying their experience on the dance floor. It may also appear a bit intimidating to other dancers.

The eyes are a key feature that reveals the nature of a smile. Smiling with your eyes expresses friendliness, sincerity and warmth. This aspect of smiling was studied by the French neurologist Guillaume Duchenne in the mid-19th century. He characterized several distinct types of smiles. The smile that is coined after him is known as the 'Duchenne smile'. This is a very natural smile that involves facial muscles that raise the corners of the mouth as well as the cheeks, thereby making the eyes more expressive. In fact, a Duchenne smile is also known as "smiling with the eyes" or "smizing". When the eyes are engaged in this manner your smile will have the power to charm others. Conversely, his insights have also revealed that the muscles around the eyes are more isolated and not naturally engaged during a forced smile. This is known as the Pan Am or Boxtop smile. This fake type of smile is likely to have been learned early in life as a mechanism for social politeness. Of course, unnatural smiles can also be used by some as a tool of deception.

Smiling really is the ultimate ice breaker at a social dance event. It is said that the eyes are the window to the soul. Did you ever wonder if you smile because you are happy or perhaps are you happy because you are smiling? This aspect of smiling has also been studied; however, either way, a smile strongly suggests the presence of a positive emotional state. This is interesting because a smile not only communicates our joy to others but also has the power to help sustain the same for ourselves. A smile actually signals the brain to release feel-good chemicals. This sets the stage for maintaining the natural state of joyfulness on the dance floor.

A smile not only creates a pleasant internal feeling but also reveals our joyfulness to others. Moreover, it encourages others to feel good in their experience as well. In essence a smile has the potential to create good feelings in oneself and one's partner. Just think of how this can be magnified when both partners are smiling. This is an easy way to bring more joy to your dance experience as well as to influence others in a positive way on the dance floor.

Back Ocho

By Michael Ditkoff

Email Michael at: tangomaniac@optimum.net

Michael Ditkoff has taken ten years of private ballroom, latin, swing and hustle lessons; eight years of private Argentine Tango, Waltz and Milonga lessons; three years of Embodied Yoga to improve his frame, and six months of Alexander Technique to improve his posture. He was also a dance host on three cruise ships. Michael resumed playing the piano in July 2023, further sharpening his musicality.

Back Ochos have to be mastered before learning boleos. By observation, few dancers understand the Back Ocho.

First, dancers have to understand the three basic parts of a pivot. The pivot begins in the shoulders. The leader rotates the follower's shoulders in the direction of the pivot. After the shoulders rotate, the hips rotate in the same direction. The hips' rotation allows the free foot to pivot. Poor dancers use their arms to pull and push to compensate for making small pivots. Joe, my teacher, told me to avoid these followers because they will ruin my dancing. My orthopedist told me to avoid them because they will ruin my left shoulder.

The leader is supposed to go straight ahead while the follower zig zags in front. (The follower is supposed to step first so there isn't a chance of the feet colliding. If the leader steps first, the space between the dancers gets smaller and there's a good chance of stepping on the partner's foot. Even worse, the follower won't move because there's no lead in moving the foot. The leader can feel the follower hasn't moved and pushes.) Instead of stepping forward, I've seen leaders step diagonally in the same direction the partner is moving. His legs are spread, and he is standing on both feet, a cardinal violation of dance. (A dancer is supposed to be on ONE foot by collecting the weight.) This will make it difficult for the partner to make a sufficient pivot. The leader looks like a cowboy who rode a horse for many hours and just got off.

I've danced with many followers who take tiny steps even though I lead big steps. (August 2018.) Tiny steps cause big problems! When the free foot is extended until it is fully extended, all the weight can be transferred to that foot. The weight transfer may not happen if the step is too small. Then the follower is on the wrong foot. Followers have tripped over their feet because the free foot didn't completely pass the support foot before making the pivot. Also, the smaller the step, the smaller the pivot.

I've seen followers practice the Back Ocho against the wall. A common mistake is their hands stay in place as they move. The hands are supposed to stay in front of them and move with the rest of the body. The leader is supposed to stay in front and move with the partner. A bad frame of the leader or follower will prevent the follower from pivoting.

Never Give Up - Failure is Not An Option

By Keith Happ

OK, it is but this is a motivational article so I was looking to keep it positive. I mean did Alexander Graham Bell give up? Did he say, "Why should I invent the phone, no one else has one, who am I even going to call?" Did Noah say, "Why am I building a boat in the middle of the desert? Where am I going to find a ruler that measures in cubics? Where am I going to go for wood?" You just can't quit because it's hard work. A friend of mine tried that, but his Sergeant wouldn't let him.

Someone once wrote that true love travels on a gravel road. Truth be told, anything worthwhile travels on that road. My dance journey traveled that same road. After I learned to count music dancing was still hard. When I failed to get a dance step or forgot how to get into or out of a dance move the challenges were now at a different level. When it may have been easier to quit I chose to persevere. When it would've been easier to say that I'm not a dancer, don't plan to compete, and it's just for fun I approached my dancing with a different state of mind. So then why am I doing this? I made the conscious decision to face the challenges and continue forward. Hey, let's face facts: "practice makes perfect" is a lie passed down from generation to generation. No one on this rock is perfect. Practice makes improvement.

We all get knocked down. It is what we choose at that test moment that defines us. Do we stay down or get up? Everyone fails now and then but the true test of your character is how we respond to those failures. You can accept defeat, lie on the ground crying, grab your mitt and ball and go home. You can wallow in your failures and a gallon of Haagen Dazs and blow up like the Hindenburg - or rise above it. Michael Jordan was cut from his high school varsity team. Spoiler alert - he continued to play basketball. J.K. Rowling had Harry Potter turned down by a dozen publishers, but did she quidditch? Not on your lifeitch. Our 16th President, Abraham Lincoln was no stranger to failure. Old honest Abe, had a long string of political losses. Did he give up? No, he did not. So don't quit - get up and brush yourself off and try again. You're in good company which reminds me I have theater tickets.

I would go to my dance class and sponge up as much as I could trying hard not to saturate my head with too much. I needed to retain just enough then go home and for two to three hours a night and practice. Usually within three to four days I saw improvement. Was this easy? No. Did I trip over my feet? Constantly. 40 plus year later looking back was it worth the time and energy I put into it? Hell yes!

You don't know your full potential until you put it to the test. Maybe dance was mine. The ancient Greeks had a term for living up to ones potential, TELOS. The telos of an acorn is an oak. Shhhh, the telos of a oak is the dining room table at Raymour & Flanigan. The challenge of our lives is to figure out what we were born to do, then do it to the best of our ability. The real Greek tragedy is spending your life chasing the wrong telos. In my youth, I chased a lot of telos.

My 9 to 5 for most of my life was quality control inspection for defense companies here on Long Island. When I was asked by a friend to be his substitute dance teacher I reluctantly accepted.

I want to say it was Donald Goodwin who wrote an article about our fears for the New York Times back in 1986, so I will. In the article he listed fears from Arachibutyrophobia, the fear of peanut butter getting stuck to the roof of your mouth. But the kicker is #4 is death, and #1 public speaking. Jerry Seinfeld said it best: "More people would rather be in the box, than giving the eulogy."

OK, now you know I am beat deaf and have a fear of public speaking, (beginning to feel like I'm in therapy, should I type this lying down)?

I was asked to sub for his Forest Hills HS Line Dance class. I prepared and studied the dance I was going to teach. I selected three to four songs per dance: one slow tempo, one medium tempo and two to dance it to. I even created a que sheet that broke down beats, what foot and a description of each dance step. I arrived at the school, mustered up the courage to enter the school and went to the office to introduce myself and find the classroom. The vice principal looked up at me and in a harsh tone said, "Another substitute!!" That was a real confidence booster. More fears with a side of anxiety. Bill apparently did this a lot. I was given the class roster and directions to the auditorium. The lesson went better than I could have hoped. The class was a wonderful group of adults ranging in age from early 20s on up.

My approach to teaching them was quite like my approach to my day job. Observation being the key, the thing that lets me see if I am doing my job. Who is getting it, who isn't. Who is a natural, who is beat deaf. I would have them do a dance with a stomp. Then I would listen. Did I hear several stomps or just one, loud, glorious stomp telling me they are all dancing together as one? The Sesame Street style of teaching, one of these things is not like the other, one of these things just doesn't belong.

I took time to make sure everyone was getting it to the best of their individual dance ability. Seeing there telos as the brass ring on the merry-go-round. My challenge was to give individual attention to some without taking too much time away from the others.

The true nerve wracking thing was the vice principal constantly coming in and sitting down to watch me. To my surprise at the end of my class he approached and said, "If I offered you this class for the remainder of the semester would you be here to teach it?" I replied, "Yes, I would be here but no I will not take the job. It belongs to a friend of mine and I will not take this job away from a friend. Plus, I have a full time job." I thanked him for the offer and left. Later that week Bill called and asked if I'd teach the class for the remainder of the semester. Not thinking, I said, "Yes." Am I facing my fears? Is this my Telos? I went back the following Thursday and every Thursday till the semester ended. Just when I thought I could leave the school and drive home, I was called into to the principal's office, gulp! He said, "The semester is complete and I can hire and fire anyone I choose." At that moment he offered me the job.

I accepted the job and over the next few months I wrote que sheets, selected music and practiced how I would teach this class. "I got this," I told myself. I have a full time job and a part time job on Thursday night. A month before my first Thursday night class I received a phone call informing me that I would be teaching Monday night at one HS, Tuesday night at another HS, Wednesday night at another HS and Thursday night at Forest Hills HS

Was this my Telos? Maybe, but still not sure. But theses moments stick with us marking our souls - marking memories forever. Maybe my Telos is just simply being the best version of myself in everything I do, every day of my life. If I had given up, if I had chosen to take the left turn instead of the right, if I had quit and said this is just too damn hard I wouldn't have the memories I have today. I wouldn't have met the wonderful dancers I know today. I wouldn't be the man I've become. Someone else would be writing these articles. My journey, my story isn't over, and neither is yours.

I ask you, What's your Telos? Teal the next dance.
-K.A.S.H.
