Basic Arm Styling for Dance

By Richard Fiore

(Licentiate, (LAB, LAR, T) Imperial Society of Teachers of Dancing)

Styling in dance describes the creative body movements that are used to embellish basic core movements of the dance. Quality dancing involves blending various technical elements such as feet positions, footwork, dance positions, amounts of turn etc. with the creative aspects of styling. The combination of good techniques and inspired body movements always conveys a high level of elegant expression on the dance floor. This article will explore the basic principles of arm styling.

Styling is an individualized form of self-expression that provides a way to make dancing a more creative experience. It is achieved by using a variety of coordinated body movements that add a large degree of artistic expression to the dance. Styling involves synchronized movements of the torso, arms, hands, fingers, hips and can also include head movements and facial expressions. The position of the arms is so fundamental in dance that classical ballet has defined five distinctive arm positions. Arm styling can be used when one or both arms are free. A basic principle that applies when dancing in an open single handhold position is to keep the free arm at approximately chest level and in front of the shoulder line. It is never a good practice to allow arms to fall below the waist or behind the body. Arms should be maintained close to the body with the forearm approximately parallel to the floor with an approximate right-angle bend at the elbow. This can be viewed as the 'neutral' arm position. It is important to maintain toned arms with a relaxed upper body throughout the dance. Tightening any part of the body always creates tension and uneasiness, making the overall experience awkward for both partners.

A primary focus of arm styling is the awareness of how arms move throughout each styling sequence. This involves the ability to visualize and control the path and speed at which the arms travel throughout the movement. Arm motion should be expressive and rhythmic. These movements are wavelike and flow in a smooth fashion with a rhythmic relationship to the music and dance steps. In this manner, arms play a big part in the artistic expression of the dance. When moving the arm out and away from the body, the energy starts at the shoulder line and propagates out through the arm to the elbow, forearm and then to the wrist, hand and out through the fingers. When moving the arm back in toward the body, the process is reversed. In both instances, the arm movement is guided primarily by the elbow. When styling the free arm out and away from the body during a crossover break, for example, it is important to lead this movement from the elbow while gently floating the arm outward at a speed that is consistent with the tempo of the music and position of the moving foot. In this manner the styling action will be appropriately synchronized with the music and step timing. It is unattractive when the free arm is just dropped and left to hang alongside of the body or placed behind the back. In this scenario the arm is unanimated and bears no relationship to the expression of the music. It is essential that arms move fluidly at a speed that matches the rhythm of the music.

Coordination of both arms is necessary when dancing in an open hold position where both arms are free. For example, side breaks is an ideal figure to use for practicing two arm styling. Both arms are synchronously coordinated together with the movement initiated from the elbow. One arm is moved away from the body while the other arm is brought in toward the body. The direction of the arms is then reversed and the same process is repeated on the other side. Both arms typically move equal and opposite to each other. Hip action can also be coordinated with the arms for an additional styling effect. The hip motion is normally circular. There are other common arm styling scenarios in which the free arm is threaded vertically upward and close to the body. This is frequently used in hustle for example where there are many shaping leads to quick turns in both directions. The follower brings her arm vertically upward with the hand leading. The movement may include a rotation of the hand as it is rising, for an extra styling accent. This styling practice also serves to avoid unintended arm collisions during turns.

Arm styling is perhaps the most prominent aspect of styling. There are many ways that arms and hands can be used to express a larger degree of creativity. Options such as hair combs, touching hips, head strokes, pointing, and circular hand rolling all add a playful and attractive accent to the overall expression of the dance. Advanced dancers are able to engage their entire body in their styling. This adds a remarkable level of creative expression to any dance routine.

The Unteachable Dance Element

By Michael Ditkoff

Michael Ditkoff has taken ten years of private ballroom, latin, swing and hustle lessons; eight years of private Argentine Tango, Waltz and Milonga lessons; three years of Embodied Yoga to improve his frame, and six months of Alexander Technique to improve his posture. He was also a dance host on three cruise ships.

Email Michael at: tangomaniac@optimum.net

I watched a trilogy of movies about the fictional American Ballet Academy, which bears an uncanny resemblance to American Ballet Theater. Both companies are at Lincoln Center. Some ABT dancers are in the movies as dancers and actors. The three movies are Center Stage, Center Stage: On Pointe, and Center Stage: Turn it Up. This article deals with the last movie.

Tommy (Kenny Wormald) is accepted into the American Ballet Academy. He's working hard when his teacher, Cooper Anderson (Ethan Stiefel) tells him despite his good technique, something is still missing from his dancing. Let's listen in on their conversation.

Cooper: But to get to the top, you're gonna have to find something that you may not be able to learn in the classroom.

Tommy: Like what?

C: Like Passion. Fire.

T: Fire?

C: You wanna be a guy that brings the crowd to its feet?

T: Yes, I do. How do I do that, exactly?

C: Look outside the box. Find that special someone or something that gets you excited, that truly inspires you. Get creative. That's what an artist does. And when you find it, make it your own. All right?

Joe, my Argentine Tango teacher said at a lesson, "Michael. One day, you'll just need me for new figures. You know enough figures. Concentrate on developing your personal style, something that makes your dancing unique." (November 2018 issue.) I followed his advice and developed a unique figure.

Martha Graham famously said "Nobody cares if you can't dance well. Just get up and dance. Great dancers are great because of their passion."

The next question is "How do you develop passion?" Discovering passion is a personal adventure because it's different for each dancer. It's unteachable.

Joe put on music and said "Dance to it. Dance the leader's role. Dance the follower's role. Do as many different figures as possible. Go forward. Go backward. Give in to the music. There are no mistakes." Even though I don't dance back ochos at a milonga, I did in this exercise. It sounds contradictory, but not really. A leader can't lead figures well without understanding the follower's footwork. A leader can have delusions of being a great dancer. The follower knows the truth.

A good follower can feel the difference between stepping and dancing. The difference is passion!

This issue marks the 5th anniversary of Michael's column!
