On the Technique

The Power of a Smile

By Richard Fiore

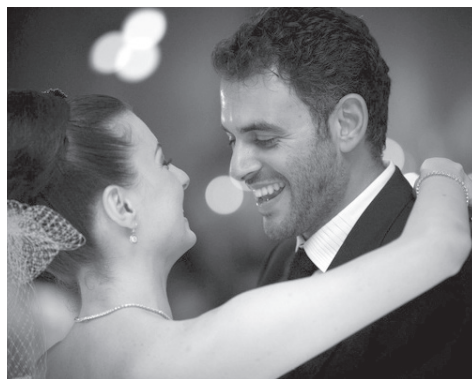

(Licentiate, (LAB, LAR, T) US Imperial Society of Teachers of Dancing)

The dance floor is an excellent place to wear a bright smile especially since dancing is an activity that already promotes a heightened state of joyfulness. Smiling is the universal expression of joy. It helps people to feel less stressed and thereby promotes an overall feeling of well-being. This is an excellent habit to cultivate on the dance floor as it expresses one's pure passion for dancing.

Smiling is a valuable personal attribute that creates the potential for positive social interactions. It makes one appear more self confident, and accepting of others. It has many other benefits to our physical and emotional well-being. Studies have found that people who smile are perceived to be more approachable. Moreover, it has the effect of eliciting a smile in another person. This is always a good way to break down shyness barriers that may exist at a social dance setting.

Smiling really is the ultimate ice breaker at a social dance event. It is said that the eyes are the window to the soul. Did you ever wonder if you smile because you are happy or perhaps are you happy because you are smiling? This aspect of smiling has also been studied; however, either way, a smile strongly suggests the presence of a positive emotional state. This is interesting because a smile not only communicates our joy to others but also has the power to help sustain the same for ourselves. A smile actually signals the brain to release feel good chemicals. This sets the stage for maintaining the natural state of joyfulness on the dance floor.

Have you ever seen dancers that are not smiling? You may occasionally notice someone with a blank stare or even a frown. It is good to avoid these facial expressions on the dance floor as it may convey disinterest, insecurity or even irritation to name a few. A blank stare or a worried look does not support the joy of dancing. Smiling sets up an internal chemistry that creates a more positive mood. It enhances one's entire personal experience in a profound way. However, it is always a good idea to make it a genuine smile and one that you can effortlessly sustain throughout the dance. A smile should be natural and not forced. A forced smile is unnatural and may have quite the opposite effect on what a smile is supposed to convey. In some cases, a forced smile may appear as though one is not genuinely enjoying their experience on the dance floor. It may also appear a bit intimidating to other dancers.

The eyes are a key feature that reveals the nature of a smile. Smiling with your eyes expresses friendliness, sincerity and warmth. This aspect of smiling was studied by the French neurologist Guillaume Duchenne in the mid-19th century. He characterized several distinct types of smiles. The smile that is coined after him is known as the 'Duchenne smile'. This is a very natural smile that involves facial muscles that raise the corners of the mouth as well as the cheeks, thereby making the eyes more expressive. In fact a Duchenne smile is also known as "smiling with the eyes" or "smizing". When the eyes are engaged in this manner your smile will have the power to charm others. Conversely, his insights have also revealed that the muscles around the eyes are more isolated and not naturally engaged during a forced smile. This is known as the Pan Am or Boxtop smile. This fake type of smile is likely to have been learned early in life as a mechanism for social politeness. Of course, unnatural smiles can also be used by some as a tool of deception.

Smiling really is the ultimate ice breaker at a social dance event. It is said that the eyes are the window to the soul. Did you ever wonder if you smile because you are happy or perhaps are you happy because you are smiling? This aspect of smiling has also been studied; however, either way, a smile strongly suggests the presence of a positive emotional state. This is interesting because a smile not only communicates our joy to others but also has the power to help sustain the same for ourselves. A smile actually signals the brain to release feel good chemicals. This sets the stage for maintaining the natural state of joyfulness on the dance floor.

A smile not only creates a pleasant internal feeling but also reveals our joyfulness to others. Moreover, it encourages others to feel good in their experience as well. In essence a smile has the potential to create good feelings in oneself and one's partner. Just think of how this can be magnified when both partners are smiling. This is an easy way to bring more joy to your dance experience as well as to influence others in a positive way out on the dance floor.

A Tango lesson

By Michael Dtkoff

I took eight years of Argentine Tango lessons when I lived in Washington, DC. My teacher taught the fundamentals that apply to tango and every other dance. (I know there won't be universal agreement, but accept the premise for the moment.) The fundamentals are 1) Axis, 2) Frame, 3) Posture, and 4) Balance. Having more of one fundamental doesn't make up for having less of another. You need ALL four! It's NOT negotiable.

Axis is keeping all your weight on ONE foot. This is extremely important for pivots which are a large part of dancing Argentine Tango (as well as Latin.) Frame is best described as a wooden frame surrounding a painting. The frame has to be the right size so the painting's alignment is correct. The same thing applies to dancers. (I wrote about alignment in last month's issue.) The lead comes from the chest. If the frame is too large, it will be difficult to have the correct alignment. Posture is best described as elongating the skeleton to stretch the body. Bad posture includes slumping shoulders and looking down at the floor. HMMM! Maybe that's one reason for so many collisions on the dance floor. Balance is self-explanatory.

Learning Argentine Tango by Understanding Ballet

I didn't go the ballet when I took lessons because 1) I hadn't acquired the taste and 2) getting to the Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts was a nuisance. (The subway hadn't opened when I moved from New York.)

I retired from the federal government and moved to Westchester County. It's much easier to get to Lincoln Center which is fortunate because I now have the acquired taste. Because of my lessons, I'm able to appreciate the dancers' technique because I clearly see the fundamentals.

The best illustration of fundamentals from ballet comes from fouettés in Act III of Tchaikovsky's Swan Lake. Go to YouTube and type Sharon Wehner performs 32 Fouettes in the search box. Notice her excellent posture - Her body is elongated. Notice her axis - All her weight is one foot which is bent. Notice her impeccable balance - She doesn't fall out of the turn. Notice her frame - Her head and arms are up and don't droop. To understand the dynamics, search "The physics of fouettes" online.

An Argentine Tango boleto (not bolero) is the closest figure to ballet's fouetté. Also, search "Gayle Tioma milonga rosa D'Arienzo" online. The lead for the boleto begins as a backwards step followed by a pivot for an ocho ("figure 8") BUT before Gayle finishes the ocho and puts her weight on the foot, Tioma suddenly changes her direction from backward to forward. This sudden change causes the woman's foot to act like a whip that is snapped. Boleto translated into English is "the whip." You can see a boleto at :50, 1:56, 2:16, 2:40 and at 2:48. Tioma uses his frame, not just his arms to lead the boleto. (The arms are part of the frame.) A poor leader only uses his arms as if driving the M4 bus down Fifth Avenue. A poor follower will use the man's left arm as a grab bar to pull and push.

It's NOT necessary to dance fouettés to dance Argentine Tango. But you need to understand the fundamentals; ALL of them to dance well.

Oh, yes. It probably would have been easier to learn Argentine Tango if I had gone to the ballet.

Simply Massage By Vicky, lmt.

Relax your body Calm your mind Renew your spirit

Simply Massage is home based and allows for only one client to be here at a time...

This makes it a very private and relaxing experience. There are no outside distractions because it's all about you! All massages come with soothing hot towels for the back and feet, as well as hot stones for the back, neck and shoulders. Whether medical, deep tissue, or light and relaxing, your massage will be tailored to your individual needs, and never rushed!

Our Philosophy

- Balance relaxation with medical necessity
- Custom treatment to fit your needs
- NO distractions in the treatment room
- Therapist's attention focused on you
- Session is never rushed!
- A one hour, for example, actually includes one FULL hour (not 55 minutes like most franchised spas)
