Economy of Motion

By Richard Fiore

(Licentiate, (LAB, LAR, T) Imperial Society of Teachers of Dancing)

Email Richard at: rf1111@yahoo.com

Economy of motion in ballroom dancing means achieving the maximum amount of precision movement and power with the absolute minimum amount of wasted energy or extra body movement. It is the art of moving efficiently so that your dancing looks effortless and fluid. Ballroom dancing at the highest level relies on a deceptively simple principle known as the economy of motion. To the casual observer, an experienced couple appears to glide across the floor with absolute physics-defying ease. There is no visible strain, no heavy breathing and no sense of frantic rush. However, this illusion of weightlessness is not achieved by raw athletic power alone. Instead, it is the result of a highly refined technique designed to maximize movement while minimizing physical effort. By learning how to cooperate with natural physical forces rather than fighting against them, experienced dancers transform an otherwise exhausting physical workout into an attractively efficient display of smooth motion.

The first and most critical aspect to this energy efficiency is leveraging gravity. Average dancers often treat movement as a series of forced muscular efforts using their thighs and calves to manually propel themselves across the room. This approach is incredibly exhausting and results in a rigid robotic style. Experienced dancers treat movement as a series of controlled gravitational releases to the floor otherwise known as fall and recovery. By subtly shifting their center of mass located in the pelvis just slightly ahead of their feet, they allow gravity to initiate their travel for them. The legs then simply step out to catch the body's weight. By letting gravity do the heavy lifting of moving the body through space, the dancer saves an immense amount of energy and achieves a seamless sweeping look.

To make this gravitational effect work smoothly, a dancer must maintain perfect skeletal alignment. The human body can be thought of as three heavy building blocks, i.e., the head, the chest and the hips. In an untrained dancer these blocks are often completely misaligned; the head juts forward, the chest collapses or the hips tilt backward. When these blocks are crooked the body's natural balance is broken, forcing the muscles in the back, neck and legs to work overtime just to keep the dancer from falling over. Master dancers focus on keeping these three blocks perfectly stacked on top of one another. When the skeleton is correctly aligned, the bones absorb the pressure of the movement, acting as a natural tower of strength. This structural alignment allows the large muscle groups to relax, drastically reducing fatigue and creating a clean elegant posture that remains unbroken through intense routines.

This individual efficiency becomes even more supernatural when applied to partner connection. In an inefficient partnership, dancing feels like a constant wrestling match. Leaders will often push or pull with their arms, while followers might resist or feel heavy. This forces both dancers to expend much more energy. An experienced dance couple's connection functions quite differently, acting more like a flexible, highly responsive trampoline net. The arms and frames hold a definitive shape but maintain an elastic give. When the leader shifts their weight, that micro-change in pressure travels instantly through the connection to the follower. Because both dancers understand how to read these subtle shifts, they can move as a single, synchronized unit without any dragging, lifting or muscle strain. Communication becomes a quiet whisper rather than a loud shout.

The final element of motion economy is a neurological skill known as selective relaxation. When beginners try to learn a difficult routine, their anxiety causes their entire body to lock up. They might be trying to move a single foot, but their shoulders are shrugged, their fists are clenched, and their jaw is tight. This uncoordinated tension is a massive waste of metabolic energy. True masters have trained their brains to turn on only the exact muscle fibers needed for a split second to execute a step while keeping the rest of the body completely relaxed. This precise control allows them to sustain high-energy performance for minutes at a time without running out of breath while keeping their faces completely calm and composed.

Ultimately, the economy of motion bridges the gap between pure athletic discipline and beautiful artistic expression. It proves that ballroom dancing is not about fighting the floor or your partner with brute force. It is about understanding the natural mechanics of the human body and working in perfect harmony with the laws of nature. When a couple achieves this balance, the physical toll of the dance completely vanishes from sight. They are no longer just athletes performing a routine but rather a finely tuned dance couple in perpetual beautiful motion moving effortlessly across the dance floor.

The Argentine Viewpoint

What is a Practica?

By Michael Ditkoff

Email Michael at: tangomaniac@optimum.net

Michael Ditkoff has taken 11 years of private ballroom, latin, swing and hustle lessons; eight years of private Argentine Tango, Waltz and Milonga lessons; three years of Embodied Yoga to improve his frame, and six months of Alexander Technique to improve his posture. He was also a dance host on three cruise ships. Michael resumed playing the piano in July 2023, further sharpening his musicality.

I've been to events called a practica. However, based on the word, practica, it wasn't a practica. A practica is the opportunity for dancers to practice a figure with other dancers. It requires cooperation and maturity between the dancers. Leaders may find out their dancing isn't as good as they thought. However, though called a practica, I saw very few dancers practicing. In most cases, the practica is really a casual milonga. At practicas, dancers stop when problems are encountered to figure out why it's not being executed correctly. There's no need to keep dancing even though the music is playing. It's more important to solve the problems.

I looked for new tango opportunities and tried a practica I never attended. Imagine my surprise when a host asked at the entrance, "What do you want to work on?" I was completely unprepared.

The hosts are not teachers, but they have extensive experience, and some can both lead and follow. I noticed the hosts helping other dancers. A follower asked me for help, so I gave her advice. It's a humbling experience when someone asks for guidance.

However, the next time I attended, I was prepared to answer the question, "What do you want to work on?" My answer was Volcadas and leading a follower to cross behind herself, which opens up new opportunities.

Information is given in a nonjudgemental manner from the host's perspective, e.g. "This is what I'm feeling." The follower isn't following what I THINK I'm leading. The follower follows what is felt. I have to figure out why I don't know what I'm leading. I've seen some leaders jump to the conclusion that their partner is at fault. That's not a healthy attitude to improve leading. These leaders should stay home.

I've been taught how to lead Volcadas but it's been a long time since the last one I lead. I didn't remember all the details, so I watched a couple demonstrate on Youtube. It gave me confidence to try it at the practica, but not at a milonga. I got most of it right but there are details I missed. Unfortunately, the practica is closed for the summer, but resumes this month, when I can continue practicing.

I look forward to improving in a warm, supportive atmosphere.

WHAT IS A Practica?

A practica is the opportunity for dancers to practice a figure with other dancers.

PRACTICE TOGETHER
Work on figures, solve problems, and improve.

COOPERATION & MATURITY
It requires respect, patience, and teamwork.

FOCUS ON FEELING
Share what you're feeling, listen, and learn.

NOT A MILONGA
We stop, discuss, and try again. It's about growth, not just dancing.

The Dance Conversation

Surpassing Place

By Sherry Jean Olander

For many people who love dancing, it is just an occasional pastime. Something they do at weddings and special occasions, and maybe also in bursts while cleaning the house or playing with their kids. For others, it becomes a central focus of their lives. For these people, their schedules revolve around the dance socials, their community is formed with others who share this obsession, and when travelling, their itineraries usually include checking out the local dance scene.

At this point, I have definitely become one of the latter. So when I travel, I try to see if I can catch at least one dance event at my temporary home. This was the case on a recent trip I took. During this trip, I unexpectedly had an opportunity to see a live performance of a Latin band during one of the festival evenings. I had been asking around and had yet to find any salsa parties so was pleasantly surprised to hear this band might give me my longed-for chance to dance.

We arrived at the venue – outdoors on a beach, next to a carnival. It was a huge event. The stage had two floors where Orquesta Los Satélites was performing. I would be lying if I said I wasn't disappointed to see that a very small part of the crowd was dancing. Most people were just standing in place, watching and listening. Soon though, I started to notice a few pockets of couples dancing merengue, cumbia, and bachata.

The group I was with didn't have many dancers but I tried to teach a few steps and managed to dance a few songs with one of my friends. Mostly, though, I was just dancing in my place and watching the crowd. I delighted in seeing that sprinkling of couples dancing among the sea of people. Like shining stars in the night, seeing them felt somehow simultaneously like hope and home.

For a moment, I forgot where I was. Or better said, I forget that I was in any specific place at all. Just as certain things can evoke for us a timelessness, I realized that a dance event, for me, can also evoke a placelessness. The music and rhythm transcended any geographical location. The dance became the "where", connected through time and space to all the other places I have danced before. I thought of friends I wished were with me, I remembered moments that happened thousands of miles away. I dreamed of my future self, dancing at some unspecified place, only present to the connection I would feel in that moment.

The main purpose of this trip was to see a total solar eclipse, one of the more thrilling moments that can happen in the grand cosmic dance of planets, moon, and sun. And the interesting thing is that when I made the decision to go, the chance that I'd actually be able to see the eclipse was pretty slim because of the season, time of day, weather, etc. But I decided that slim possibility of things working out would be well worth the costs involved, so I made a leap of faith.

As it turned out, I ended up getting lucky this time. I was able to see the entire eclipse, on a beach, with perfect weather... and it was incredible. The sun and its gravity, spinning the earth around itself, the earth doing the same with the moon, and the three aligned, like a choreographed performance – for a rare and unbelievable moment. This alone would have made the trip worthwhile. But even if I didn't get to witness the beauty of this cosmic dance moment, I still got a few dances of my own in during the trip, and in the end, that would have made it all okay. Now that I've returned with this new insight, I know that I can always re-connect to those far-away lands I've travelled to, simply because there too, I have danced.
