The Power of a Group Experience

By Richard Fiore

(Licentiate, (LAB, LAR, T) Imperial Society of Teachers of Dancing)

There are many things that inspire people to dance. The most evident of all are the benefits to physical and emotional wellbeing. This article will take a look at the role that a group experience plays in motivating people to dance.

There is something almost inexplicable about how passionately some are drawn to social dancing. This attraction can become very intense in a relatively short period of time. In fact, dancing can be perceived by some as one of the most vital aspects of life.

These individuals spend considerable time thinking about and planning for the next social dance event, refining dance skills at group classes, watching dance videos and so on. They become keenly aware that dancing relieves everyday tensions while supporting health and fitness. Ballroom dancers also know the personal satisfaction that ensues from gliding along the dance floor with a partner, especially to enjoyable music. These are some of the well-known benefits that are derived from dancing. There is yet another aspect that fosters an attraction toward dancing. It is the natural resonance that is experienced between individuals within the context of a social group setting. It is a well-known fact that dancing creates a social bond between one another and oneself. Dancing has traceable roots to numerous ancient rituals that are strongly linked to forming bonds within entire social groups. In this sense, dancing is a social glue that serves to satisfy our innate human need to belong to a group.

The French sociologist, Emile Durkhiem set out to formulate a scientific explanation of what bonds societies together in spite of people's social differences. Durkhiem developed a theory that he termed 'collective effervescence'. He describes this as electricity shared between individuals within a social group that leads to euphoria. Durkheim believed that social groups exert a powerful influence on the individuals within the group. According to him, people's norms, beliefs and values make up a collective awareness that provides a mutual way of behaving in society. In his view, this is what joins individuals together to establish social integration. Collective effervescence provides a way for individuals to bond with each other within a group. The emotional energy that one receives from taking part in social gatherings gives a sense of closeness and unity to individuals within the entire group.

American psychologist Abraham Maslow in his theory 'Hierarchy of Needs' describes a pyramid structure of human needs. According to his theory, self-actualization occurs when all of the needs on the pyramid have to be met in order to advance to the next level. One of the most central in his model is the need to belong and affiliate within a social group. His theory in combination with Emile Durkheim's collective effervescence strongly suggests that humans innately seek to be socially linked. Accordingly, when in social group settings, individuals tend to share strong bonds in spite of their differences. As dancers move together on the dance floor, they are likely to experience collective effervescence as an elated feeling in the moment.

Another study by Bronwyn Tarr, a trained dancer and biologist from the University of Oxford has tested Durkheim's idea further. One of the things she discovered is that humans have a natural tendency to synchronize their physical movements with those of other individuals. This includes tapping, nodding our heads and limbs, all without even meaning to do so as though searching for a common rhythm to share. She found that when we observe another person moving, it activates a region in the brain that prompts us to make those same movements. Accordingly, as we mimic our partner's movements, they are mimicking ours. It results in neuro-networks in both partners opening up a rush of similar, if not exact, feel-good neuro-hormones. This suggests that blending with our partner as well as others on the dance floor can leave us feeling euphoric. Dancers feel exhilarated as they keep the beat together. From this, individuals feel more tightly bonded to their fellow dancers. They share emotional energy that gives a sense of unity. Such intensely shared experiences make this especially enjoyable.

Groups are formed by people uniting for the purpose of pursuing a common interest. Dancing does this very profoundly as it involves physical activity with a partner to music. There is a special chemistry that creates a joyful state of mind that is felt by both partners as well as the entire group. Dancing gives an individual positive emotional energy that result in a strong sense of unity with others within the group.

Visiting the Argentine Tango Mecca

By Michael Ditkoff

Michael Ditkoff has taken ten years of private ballroom, latin, swing and hustle lessons; eight years of private Argentine Tango, Waltz and Milonga lessons; three years of Embodied Yoga to improve his frame, and six months of Alexander Technique to improve his posture. He was also a dance host on three cruise ships.

Email Michael at: tangomaniac@optimum.net

Many Argentine Tango dancers plan to visit Buenos Aires, the "Mecca of Argentine Tango." I didn't go until I finished eight years of private lessons. Dancing in Buenos Aires is completely different than dancing in New York. Not even close!! You have to be prepared before you buy your plane ticket. Those who are unprepared are in for a B-I-G, expensive, unpleasant surprise!

First, you need to take lessons HERE before you go THERE. Argentine Tango is completely different from any ballroom and latin dance you've learned. (June and July 2022 issues.) It's not a dance you can "pick up" after a few lessons. Some dancers think a few lessons in Buenos Aires prepare them for the dance floor.

You pay your admission to the milonga without knowing the attendance because a curtain blocks your view of the dance floor. An usher takes you to a table. (You don't pick your table.) Men and women sit at separate tables. All invitations and acceptances are by cabeceo. (May 2018 issue.) A follower said she forgot her contacts and missed every cabeceo. For cabeceo to be effective, the lights were ON at every milonga. (October 2021 issue.) Some New York milongas are so dark I need a flashlight.

You have to understand the dance sequence. It's not the same at a dance social where the dance changes after every dance. Dances are played in a group, called a tanda. The sequence is a tanda of 4 tangos from orchestra A, 4 tangos from orchestra B, 3 Argentine Waltzes from orchestra C, 4 tangos from orchestra D, 4 tangos from orchestra E, 3 milongas from orchestra F. The pattern repeats with different orchestras. (The milonga and waltz tandas can change positions.) In between each tanda, there is a cortina (curtain) of non-Argentine music which signals the tanda is over. Leaders escort their partners to their tables and then return to their table. After the cortina, the next tanda begins and the selection process (cabeco) begins.

Unlike in New York, the Argentines (not Argentinians!) wait for the music to determine if they want to dance. It's different in New York. Some leaders don't wait for the music. In this situation, leaders invite for a tanda they don't lead well. This is bad news for the leader - - and even worse for the follower.

Unlike in New York, nobody dances American Tango to Argentine Tango music in Buenos Aires. Nobody dances Viennese Waltz to Argentine Waltz
